

Confusion

He didn't know what he wanted,
Poor guy, he was confused, by his family.
And told not allowed, by the hospital.

He wanted his mighty inheritance,
She tried to help him, get what he wanted,
Took care of him through his illness.

But his family forced him to dump her,
Even though he loves her still.
And no wonder that he jumped off a ferry,
Thought to take his life.
It was all in the papers.

He left her, took the easy way out,
For life was so difficult.
Then he'd be sorry, as usual.
He thought, by doing what family wanted,
He'd be one or of them.
Be part of society, they would be around,
Thought he'd do nicely, but it wasn't the case
They left him to his own devices, and he was lonely.

And he'd left her with nothing and nobody,
He'd forgotten what she'd done for him,
And his marriage vows, now full of sorrow.
