

He made me a packed lunch of plankton bread and wine,
And gave me his cards. I swam for two days, resting at night.
And finally reached home, falling asleep in your arms,
As you stroked my hair and told me you'd missed me.
When I awoke, I lay with my eyes half open, and saw you
Turn into a fish and head for the water.
I followed you and jumped in too, turning into a fish.
I reached you, and said, 'you too, it had to be you'.
You said, I was testing your love for me,
And showing you my world. You passed,
And I know you like my other side.
